MR. EDITOR:-DEAR SIR-OWING TO AN IN MR. EDITOR:—DEAR SIR—OWING TO AN INsertion which met my eyes in some of our Long Island papers some time stnee, relative to an affair which eccurred between one Mr. Prime, of Huntington, and the proprietor of an establishment known as Layton's, and so called by some people a public house, but which is intended ealy as an accommodation for what may prove to be friends of its owner, I would fain contradict a part of the aforesaid assertion through your columns: I now refer to the eld adage, that one story is good until another is told. Mr. Prime, according to his own statement, started from New York with a company consisting in part of two women and two infant children, site in the aiternoon of Saturday, the 12th of January, intending or each Huntington at ten o'clock that night precisely—in that he was disappointed; his designs were frustrated by the appearance of a storm, which, in corroboration with other evidence, must have overtaken them before reaching January. In doubt not, had they sought the aid of the villagors, who had not yet retired to their beda, they would have found every mass requisite to render them comfortable. But no, they continued on their journey through the pelting storm, shuning all the wayside houses and their benevolent occupants, who would not, I trust, at any reasonable hour term from their doors and warm fireside any person who might chance to be perishing with tion. I think we are not responsible for the sufferings of ignorance and incomprehenable beings who know no better than to stay with womes and infant children at nightfall, to travel over a rough and almost impassable road, a claiance of nearly forty miles with a severe storm threatening them at every slep with no intention of patroniang any botel, unless utterly compelled to do so—Mr. Prime having previously said that botels were totally unnecessary. His ples for all this night siep with no intention of patroniang any hotel, unless unterly compelled to do so—Mr. Prime having previously said that hotels were totally unnecessary. His ples for all this night travelling is, that the women had been detained in the city some time on account of a previous storm, and were anxious to return to Huntington, the place of their residence. Now, it appears they were willing, with the rest of the party, to endure almost any hardships which might present itself, in order to reach their home; they drove on until about one o'clock; upon reaching Layton's, they stopped under his shed, and as Mr. Frime asys, all acknowledged is to be a comfortable place. But with this they were not contented. They proceeded to awaken the occupants of the house by thumping at the doors and windows, and finally succeeded in arouning the oroprietor from his bed, whither he had gone late that night, thinking, of course, that no human being would be travelling on such a night, who could gain or beg admission into any house or hovel that might afford them shelter from the severe storm that had been raging for several hours. After getting him up and asking him for lodging, he replied that he did not feel able to go out to such weather to assist them; and as he had not been instrumental in their previous sufferings, he did not feel by any means compelled to emerge from his confictable dwelling at past midnight and in such a storm, thereby subjecting himself to schemes or other injury, in order to alleviate the unferting of those, who by their own ill contrivances and mismangement, had brough them thus far. He therefore closed the door of the hungry animals; they left the doors open, thereby this had been they are also be the hungry animals; they left the doors open, thereby this in the first of the hungry animals; they left the doors open, thereby this contribute and the predict of their hungry animals; they left the doors open, thereby this in the first of the predict of their hungry animals; they left the doors open, thereby th
